

LEGEND

CAR	Combined Arms Reserve
CP	Command Post
DAG	Division Artillery Group

This template describes a Russian armed forces division in a positional defense as part of the first echelon of a combined arms army (CAA) or army corps.

A division's total defensive width is approximately 30 to 40 kilometers, with a total depth of approximately 20 to 25 kilometers.

When in a positional defense, a division's first echelon typically consists of two or three motorized rifle or tank regiments and their attachments.

The second echelon typically consists of one motorized rifle or tank regiment or battalion.

The combined arms reserve typically includes one or two motorized rifle or tank battalions.

The antitank reserve typically consists of an antitank battalion.

When in a positional defense, a division may detach regiments from the first echelon to conduct security in the security zone.

The DAG typically consists of the artillery in the artillery regiment (excluding antitank artillery), along with any assets allocated from the CAA's army artillery group, minus those artillery units that the division has assigned to subordinate units.

Source Note: Analysis derived from multiple Soviet and Russian military documents, including training and educational material.

THREAT TEMPLATE

T2COM G-2

Visit the Russia Landing Zone